

Just because the system conspires as collective good to silence an audacious voice, does the truth nulls to existence? Those who believe it does are the worst victims of devil alongaide their actions which display nothing but demonic attributes. It is better to use polite words to do unjust as a proper insult, but you cannot teach the idiots who try to define philosophy, morality, and all their complicated waste of words, let us not litter then, and let us please understand the limitations of what is even definable or solvable.

What can be hell, or how does one define hell... does one even know the definition of what they talk about when associating with that word?

This existence, a human entity, who is a consumer of what this world has to offer, if one starts accepting the rawness of what they are as a truth... it wouldn't make sense of his attachments to those. But for the sake of living, and not attempting to the temptations of ending lives who has lost everything in life; a proletariat, one starts anew with the same illusion of living on, and attaching oneself to something shackleble. What a human entity does is not of concern because it probably is a different cage one willingly enters to be caged at. But in transition, yes the transition, as a resilience one shows, meaning who has not yet lost in the battlefield of life, it is no easy feat who gathers oneself up from ruins to be an astronomically different person than who one was. Not all the time does it results in the positive directions, but the expressions, prior definitions, and all that is that's relatable with shackles that oneself attaches one to... they are altered beyond recognition. We call it, "going through hell". If we look at such from this perspective, then he'll becomes a human thing. And by such, well it does not require much intelligence to understand what comes next, that our human experience is nothing but a result of our perception of our actions. We react to what we do, be it going through inferno or something. That is more of a human problem to deal with than an angelic word such as sin. Our society, is constructed by the sinners, who of course sinned to sinfully construct a place where it is very easy to be tempted to sin because tolerance is called courtesy, ultimately fundamentally it are the sinners who judges individual sinners for sinning differently for, through, as all means. This whole thing brings everything under the action principle. But let us go back, we need not that for the time being because it is an astronomically different problem to which like all of us idiots, may not even know the definition for or of.

A stoney proverb which may have existed to never see a stone to ever grow flowers on its chest, may never also exist to see a fertile soil to first harden, then turn to stone to never be capable to blossom any genitals of vegetation which by the sheer hypocrisy of an invisible kind is considered a symbol of love to our human kind. But a human changes.

Sure it needs one or two existential crisis, but if one is resilient enough, one can make it through. Because a human changes, through learning from being a monkey to which resemble something that is a walking hypocrisy, clothed by the willingly stupid irony.

So, isn't the world hell? Do we not see it in the faces which lost all human definitions to it, like, just to name one... empathy? The system, which we concluded is a collective construction of the action of a population, doesn't an entity live inside that which we call a world build from the perception because one lives inside it and sees as an observer?

Phrasing the problem in such a human term, which is a special case, does not bring biblical or other overly complicated waste of words. It feels like painless gravity, which makes us humbly down to earth, not attempting to create a neo mythology of our own, or some silly attempts to relate ourselves with legendary characters or all kinds such as a Pokemon like Darcry.